When the rain finally arrived, it fell for three days without a pause, and the fields became small lakes. The library kept its doors open until nine, which made it the warmest place in town during the winter. Every Friday the musicians gathered near the fountain and played songs that their grandparents had taught them. The station master checked his watch twice, nodded at the driver, and the last train of the day pulled away. The library kept its doors open until nine, which made it the warmest place in town during the winter. Children walked to school along the canal, counting boats and arguing about which one was the fastest.
